

special collections DOUGLAS Library

queen's university AT kingston

kingston ontario canada

THE

FREE and IMPARTIAL EXAMINER:

BEING

A Candid E N Q U I R Y into the Causes of our present Melancholy SITU-ATION, with Regard both to Domestick and Foreign A F F A I R S.

TOGETHER

With a W O R D in Defence of the Dutch's not entring into our M E A S U R E S.

Quod tegitur, majus creditur effe malum. Magna eft Veritas & prevalebit.

MART.

L O N D O N:

Printed for and fold by M. Cooper at the Globe in Pater-Nofler-Row. M DCC XLV.

[Price One Shilling,]

AC911.1745.F73

T H E

PREFACE.

IT is very amazing into what a new Strain of Policy we are now arrived, that we are become for ready to Protect and Defend the whole World. To fight other Peoples Battles; Garrison their fortified Towns, and supply them with Money on every trisling Occasion; is a Degree of Quixotism, even beyond what Cervantes ever thought of inspiring into his mad Knight, and really when I reflect on the many Extravagent Adventures, that has befel Old England, by her intermedling with Affairs on the Continent: I can hardly persuade my self that the Life of Don Quixot is a Romance.

Woold

iv The PREFACE.

Would it not surprise any one of common Sense, to observe, how affidioufly we fend out our Forces, to supply foreign Armies and Garrijons, when we know not how foon we may be in want of them at Home? who will ve ture to engage that, when the French King thinks be kas Jufficiently drained this Island of Men, that he will not attempt to invade it? Then of what Advantage will all our Forces abroad be to us? -😘 O! lays a cunning Fellow, one of " our new Politicians, we can soon " fetch them back from Oftend; and " the same Wind brings the French " hither, brings our Troops hither". Aye! very fine and pretty truly___ But suppose the Wind should change in the Interim between the Arrival of the Enemy, and our fending for our Forces --- Or what is more probable, what if a large French Fleet

The PREFACE. v

Fleet should lie at the Mouth of Ostend Harbour? - Why then, says he, ours must go out and fight them. But is not this loofing a great deal of Time, and in Cases of such Immergency, every Moment seems an Hour. But how could our Fleet possibly get up to Ostend if the Wind set fair for bringing our Forces from thence hither? But then, says my Politician again, we would raile the Country---And indeed that would do finely against an Army of regular Forces tho' all these Expedents would be unnecessary, if we keep but a few more of our Soldiers at Home.

When I first undertook the following Sheets, I had no other Design than only to trace the Causes of the present Scenes; but I could not forbear, when I found the Blame of all our Miscarriages was laid upon the Dutch, to mention a Word or two in their

vi The PREFACE.

their Behalf: —— It is certain, that we have Accusations enough against them, for not sulfilling their Engagements to us both by Land and Sea: But that by bullying and worrying, they shall be obliged to enter into a War, right or wrong, is what no free People under the Sun, will, I believe submit to.

As my Representations through on the whole of this little Picce, may have too much Veracity to suit the Polite Tastes of some of our new Petit Maitres of M----rs: I very much fear that I shall not escape the inviduous Appellations, of Jacobite, Tory, and Coward: But as the two former are almost every one therewith, who is so unkappy as to contradict their Sentiments, it gives me not the least Anxiety. And as to the latter of these Appellations, I think the

The PREFACE. vii the Man, who endeavours to set his Country right in any Case, or to inform her of any Thing to Advantage, in a Time of general Degeneracy; that Man does not deserve it---- for he that bravely employs his Pen in his Country's Cause, may truly be said to serve her Indeed.

THE

THE

FREE and IMPARTIAL

EXAMINER.

HOEVER has the Good of his Country at Heart, and reflects on the enormous Grievances, and deplorable Difadvantages, which she at prefent lies under, and has endured for fome Time past; cannot, I am persuaded, forbear joining with me in employing his Thoughts on the Means of redressing those Grievances, and extenuating the Disadvantages. This is certainly a Duty incumbant on an honest Man at all Times; but more especially in Time of apparent Danger, whether arising from willful Invaluation.

tuation, Degeneracy, or Corruption; or from unavoidable Misfortunes.

It is certain, no Government can be fo wife but it may be overfeen, nor so sagacious but it may be deceived: And it is univerfally acknowledged, that when Forefight fails Experience must be our Guide: For when we perceive by the Event, that we have trusted to false Appearances, Conjectures, Surmises, and Opinions, infomuch that our Expectations are deceived; it behoves us to rectify our Conduct in the shortoft Time possible; and not to suffer Evils to grow to that Height by Neglect, as to become insusceptible of all Remedy, and Error to beget Error, till it is impossible to difintangle the Complication, nor Misfortune to follow Misfortune, till we are entirely overwhelmed; but to endeavour, in the shortest Time possible, to attain the Paths of Wisdom and Safety, the sure Way to Honour and Renown.

In order to which it is necessary to enquire into the Causes of our Mistakes, Misfortunes, and Disappointments: as it is a well known Principle, universally true, that every different Effect has a different Cause; we must trace Causes by Effects, and when discovered, endeavour to counter-act or remove move them; that thereby we attain that Remedy for our past Deception which we so earnestly seek after: For it is in Matters of State as in Physick, when the Cause of the Disease is discovered, the Gure is half perfected.

It is certain that Nature has not been sparing in her Bounties, to render us a free independant and happy People; and we can boast of more Advantages of that Sort, than any People on the Face of the Earth. She has feated us on an Island, invironed with Seas, capacious enough to prevent any Anxiety from the ambitious Views, or mercenary Quarrels, of our Neighbours on the Continent: And to compleat our Happiness has given us wherewithal to render ourselves Masters of those Seas. No Island can abound more with the Produce of Necessaries for Life at home; nor can be better fituated for Commerce abroad; informuch that we export our superabundant Necessaries, to import Luxuries from distant Our People are ingenious in Arts and Sciences, and have ever been characterized, in the Histories of all Nations, People of an intrepid, masculine Spirit, indefatigable in Pursuit of their Designs. British Valour was never questioned, and tho' Voltaire in his Life of Charles the XIIth of Sweden, from a superficial Knowledge of $\mathbf{B} = \mathbf{a}$ us, us, rathly afferts, That the English of thefe Days are dwindled to nothing in respect to what they were in Cromwell's Time. Nevertheless I am convinced by the gallant Behaviour of my Countrymen at Fountency, fighting in a foreign Caufe against Batteries of the largest Cannon designed for destroying Stone Walls, not Men, and over-powered by the Superiority of Numbers; that even their Enemies must allow they are not less intrepid now, than in the Days of Queen Ann when headed by a Marlborough; which I take to be the Ara of their Glory. Hence it is easy to perceive that we want not for Soldiers, and it is equally certain, that we have many valiant Commanders, and fagacious Statesmen; and to crown all are are bleffed with a Monarch whose chief Care is the Happiness of his People, and the Tranquility of Europe; whose passionate Love for Liberty is fuch, as ever to be ready, even at the Hazard of his own Royal Person; to oppose the Destroyers of it; thereby anxiously endeavouring to Communicate to all Nations, those inestimable Blesfings of Freedom, which his own Subjects, under his auspicious Protection so amply enjoy.

If we come to examine our Constitution, there is no Nation in the World can compare pare with us for the Wisdom of its Institution. The People are independant, and frame their own Laws, leaving only the executive Power to the Prince; who whilst he distributes them justly, is ever sure of reigning in the Hearts of his People, the only Place where a wife Monarch would chuse to establish his Throne. Our Parliament is the Grand Council, and Grand Inquest of the Nation, ever ready to advise the Throne in Case of Emergency, or to defend it in Times of Danger: And it is equally the Interest of a King of England to govern his Subjects with Lenity, as it is theirs strenously to support him in such a Government. Where the mutual Interests of King and People, are to strongly interwoven and united by fuch incomplicable Bands, What Foreign Power but must regard them with Awe and Veneration, and respect the Decree of the Prince as the Voice of his Subjects, or the Resolutions of the Subjects, as the Pleasure of their Prince?--Such an excellent Harmony of Minds must certainly give great weight to all our foreign Negotiations; and renders our Monarch more glorious, than that Prince whose Will is his Law.

Thus while we preserve our Constitution entire, it may be said to be a Wall unto us both both on the Right, and on the Left; preferving us from Danger both at home and abroad, and ever making us to be revered and dreaded by our Neighbours: But if we fuffer the leaft Breach to be made therein, it may be widened in Time, infomuch as to expose us to the Assaults of those, who formerly we contemned.

Tho' our Constitution is so excellent in it felf; our Soldiers fo brave, and our Senators and Statesimen are endowed with such penetrating Wifdom; yet, by whatever Fatality it has happened, it is now manifestly evident, to all that shall compare our present State with our former, that we have been for feveral Years paft entangled in a strong Snare of false Politicks; even as apparently contrary to the Interest of our Country, as-Darkness is to Light, and seem to have been chain'd down, in a State of Egyptian palpable Darkness, with a Chain of Blunders and Follies, which we have drawn out, Link by Link. We have annually exhaufted our Treasures to aggrandize our Enemies, and employed feveral Years of Negotiation to incite Infults, Depredations, and Invafions; we have courted and engaged almost every Power of Europe to affift us, yet none will stir to our help, unless paid an exorbitant Price to the utmost Farthing. $\mathbf{B}\mathbf{y}$

By purfaing fuch erroneous Measures for many Years past, we are at length become a weak, infatuated, mercenary, and corrup-ted People at Home. Our C——s refulting from Men of different Principles, Views, and Interests; are feeble, unsteady, and irrefolute, and the Execution of them weak and timid: Orders are iffued in fuch a Manner, that Officers know not how to obey, regarding their Interest in the Cabinet, more than their Behaviour in their Command. Our Armies and Fleets are replete with Minions of Power, promoted by parliamentary Interest, not Merit; which unjust Promotions must ever create jealousy in the meritorious; and to this alone, may be attributed all our henious Miscarriages, from the Affair of Carthagena, to that of Toulon; which may be a Warning to future Ages, not to suffer Interest, even in Times of Peace, to transplant Merit. Our Successes are as motley as our Councels, one Day we gain a fmall fomething, and the next lofe ten-fold as much; this occasions the People to be uneasy, mistrustful, and dead-hearted; but however, shews at the same Time how thoroughly the Love and regard for the present Royal Family is ingrafted in their Hearts; as it it would be utterly impossible, even for the ablest Ministry, to make them bear fuch Afflictions under any other Government, without more grievous and open murmurings and repinings, which, whatever Appearances their Countenances and Behaviours at prefent may carry, Thanks be to God, we hear nothing of from their Tongues.

Our Commerce, notwithstanding the Puffs of our Men of War and Privateers, is visibly upon the Decay; owing to the many Captures lately made by the Enemy, and the prodigious Price of Insurance, together with the shameful delay of Convoys; not to mention the large Share that the D-b have taken the Opportunity to deprive us off, which will be a more lasting Advantage to them, than any other that could accrue from the War, and confequently is an inestimable Loss to us. Our Lands are devoured with those Locusts call'd Taxes, and as to our Funds, if a Bankrupt Nation may be faid to have any; they are filled with the Money of Foreigners, who are ever ready to take Advantage of our Necessities; infomuch that by a fudden Draught, they could do us im-mense Damages, by leaving us little else than Paper to circulate. This obliges our monied People to hoard their Bags, not careing to advance a Farthing on Trade or otherways, except in Land Security; and this, confequently, must occasion that miserable rable degree of Poverty, which is every where beheld amongst the meaner Sort of People who cannot get Bread, for want of Encouragement and Employment. Thus by People being prevented from employing their Money in Trade, our Manufactures lie idle, the Work-houses fill, and our Poors Rate encreases; which we must either pay, or those miserable Wretches must perish.

That this is the melancholy State of Affairs at home, will, I believe, be readily granted me by most: But that I may not feem to aggravate Matters, by Affertions without Proofs, I shall consirm what I have said, by bringing such as the Nature of my Subject will admit of.

Whether our present Councils do not proceed from Men of different Principles, Views and Interests? I shall leave to the Decision of any Gentleman, of any Party whatever, who has been acquainted with the Scene of Assairs for about twenty Years past.——let him but take the List in his Hand—and I dare engage he will give me his Assirmative on the Question: And if it was needful, I could from their former, and present Conduct, distinctly enumerate the ruling Passion of every individual amongst them them. But personal Reflections, and Alterations, are what I utterly test. That our C - ls are feeble, unfleady, and irrefolute, is plain, by the Frequency of Couriers, or Messengers, pasfing and repassing, betweet Whiteh - 11 and H-n-v-r. Tho' a Plan or Defign for any future Operation be formed at either of these Places, it must undergo Examination at the other, before it can be perfected; which causes a confiderable Quantity of Time to be wasted. For setting the Case that our M-v here had formed the most specious Project, (from fome Intelligence they had received) for stopping the Progress of the Arms of France, their Scheme must be entrusted to some Courier to carry to H-r, before it can be executed; and consequently runs a great Rifque of falling into the Hands of the French, either by Sea or Land. ---But supposing it to get safe thither, and meet with the R-y-1 Appropation, it must come hither again before Orders can be given for the Execution of it; and certainly runs the fame Rifque over again in its Return; and perhaps, by that Time Affairs may be so altered as to render it impracticable. If any manner of Doubt should arise at H - r, concerning the Plausibility of the Scheme, or the Manner of the Execution, Where has the K-g his British Council

Council to advise with? Surely none will pretend to avouch the Head of a fingle Secretary, equivalent to that of the whole Board? and it were heartily to be wished, that when his M-y thinks proper to visit his German Dominions, he were to be accompanied with a Committee of C --- 1 for urgent Affairs, as well as a Sec—y of State.— Thus the Resolutions of C—1, by waiting so long before they can be put in Execution, become by the fudden and unexpected Turns of Affairs, feeble, unsteady, and irresolute; and consequently the Orders issued thereon, must be encumbred with fo many Restrictions, as to render it almost impossible for any Officer to obey.

It would be unnecessary to go about to prove, that our Army and Fleets, are full of Commanders that were created by the Power and Interest of themselves or Relations, and not by Merit; fince no one, that has observed, through what Channels Promotions in those Branches have glided for many Years past, can be ignorant of it; and if notorious that the S—y of W—r, has long fince been allowed to fill up a certain Number of C m—ff—s, with the Names of the best P—r-h — f—rs he could meet with. This Affair, indeed, narrowly escaped an Examination in the House C 2 of C-mm-ns, but, like a great many other good Things, it was laid aside. The Effect of such military Promotions we feel severely, and may very well say to those in Power at that Time, as the Frogs did to the Boys that pelted them, in the Fable, It was but Play to them, but it is Death to us: Nevertheless, I hope, we shall profit by Experience, especially as it is never too late to learn Wisdom.

ot.

That our Gains by the War will ballance our Losses, will easily appear, on considering that we must take a great Number of Privateers, to defray the Expence of building and fitting out such a sine Ship as the Northumberland: And it appears by the List handed about, that the French and Spaniards, are not much behind us in their Capatures, either for the Number or Value lue of Ships. Indeed Admiral Anfon's Voyage produced a fine Show, and made a great Talk: But when it comes to be confidered that there was not an Haltpenny of it publick Money, I believe our Landholders will not think themfelves much benefited by his'Acquifitions; and indeed, had the whole Treasure, with which he made fuch a grand Parade, been for publick Service, it would have done little more than rebuilt the Ships that were loft, and paid the Wages due to the Officers and Men that died in the Expedition: Nor would double the Money defray half the Expences of the Campaign. But the People must be pleased if it is but with a Droll.

That the People are uneasy, mistrustful, and deadhearted, is obvious even to the Eyes of the Mean-est: And that our Commerce is decayed decayed any one may casily be con-vinced, by comparing our Imports and Exports with what they were at any former Time, even that of the late War. Nobody, furely, will have the Affrontery to contradict my Affertion of the D-ch running away with our Trade, fince it is well known they carry on a very advantageous Commerce with Spain, and make great Returns from the Spanish and French Settlements in America, by supplying them with Fish taken upon our own Coasts: This they do openly; as to their private Efforts to supplant us they are too many to be enumerated at present, and of which, perhaps, I may give a particular Account in another Place.

However unequal our Land Tax may be affessed, nevertheless, it is certain that the Rent great Part of the the Lands of England, fall into the King's Hands every fifth Year; indeed fome that are easier rated may hold out to the Sixth or Seventh. However, tho' the Landholders do not perceive the Effects of it immediately, yet they become so sensible of it in process of Time, as to be obliged either to fell or mortgage. ---- As to our Public Funds, it is true the three great Companies keep up their Stocks at a high Price: ---- But may not this be to draw in Buyers? ---- Who is it excepting the Directors of the respective Companies, that can be able to make even a moderate Estimate of their Profits, or who can inform us whether they are Gainers or Loofers by Trade? --- They may be able to furnish the Government with a Sum of Money, for an Emergency at an easy Rate, and to make pretty large Dividends ---- 'Tis their their Interest to keep up their Credit strongly, especially in Time of War when they run most Hazards. Many a Banker has kept open Shop for some Time, with very little but Paper to traffick withal, much more large Companies, whose Stocks confift mostly in the Fortunes of Widows and Orphans; that are retired far into the Country, in order to live cheap on fuch Interests and Dividends as their Fortunes produce: But flould there happen a general Draught for Money, to that the Proprietors of these Companies should be obliged to sell, lamentable I fear would be the Effects. ---But this, I only mention by the Bye, in answer to those; who from the Rife and Fall of Stocks, judge of the Affluence or Poverty of the Nation; and Stocks being now at a high Rate, it affords some People an Opportunity of exulting, and arguing arguing from thence, that we are in the most prosperous Circumstances; but how justly I leave to others Determination. The large Sums that Foreigners are allowed to advance in our Funds, will always give them an Opportunity of improving their Money; and at the same Time preserves the Ballance of Trade in their Favour; while it obliges our very great monied Men at home, either to hoard their Cash, or to employ it in a usurious Manner for want of that Admittance into the Publick Loans, which is afforded to Strangers, to our immense Disadvantage. It may indeed feem incredible that large Sums should be laid by to mould in fuch a Trading Nation as this: --- But as others, as well as my felf, are equally fenfible of the Veracity of the Fact; I need only appeal to them, to fatisfy my Reader if he should be unacquainted with D

it. This, together with the Havock made by the Enemy's Privateers, are the Causes of our Manufactures lying idle; to put which out of Doubt, 1 refer any one to examine that of Printing of Linens, in which Branch of Trade, there has been several topping Masters become Bankrupts fince the War began with Spain; and those that yet hold up their Heads, do not now employ above four Hands in the Printing, that used to have twenty or thirty in constant Work. ---- Ask them the Reason, they will tell you, That there is no call from abroad; our Men of War are idle, the French and Spanish Privateers snap up all the Ships, and the D---tchengross all the Trade in the West Indies; by supplying our Colonies with printed and stained Linens, much cheaper than we can afford to do, on Account of the Insurance running running fo high. I mention this Branch of Trade in particular, as I take it to be a very great one; it making great Returns yearly from all the foreign Plantations before the War began; and was the Support of numberless Families of Poor, by employing even the Women and Children at very competent Wages. But fince this Decay, the Cutters and Printers, who earned their two Guineas a Week, must be obliged either to enlift for Soldiers, enter for Seamen, or go to Holland for to get Employment: Our home Consumption not being sufficient to support them. Which, if we should regain this Branch upon a Peace, will cause the few Workmen that shall be lest to raise their Prices to such a Degree, that few Masters will be able to employ them; or, perhaps, by our Want of Hands, it will enable our good Friends the Dutch to keep on the Trade to as much Advantage as they do at present.

D 2

I could produce the Glass, and several other Manusactures, for Proofs of my Assertion, that our Manusactures are decaying and idle; but the daily filling our Work-houses, and Increase of the Poor's Rate, are such undeniable Testimonies of it and so evident, to every one that keeps House, or pays Taxes; that it will admit of no Dispute.

Having thus finished my View of our home ziffairs, I shall proceed to give a Sketch of our foreign; and then enquire into the Causes of the lamentable Prospect resulting from both.

If Affairs at home afford fuch a melancholy Spectacle, I am afraid that those abroad will not furnish a much better; and that the Confufion fion of our Foreign Concerns, will equal the Disorder of our Domefrick. It is true, I have not all the Lights 1 could wish for on this Head; neither can I take upon me to say that I am Master of our prefent political System: But as this latter, perhaps, is what some of the greatest Politicians in the M----y be deficient in, as well as myself, I do not fear to fet forth and account for the State of our foreign Affairs, without the Help of that System, or any other: And shall be so little of a Philosopher as to take Things as they really appear, and endeavour from thence to ascertain their Causes; leaving our political Sophisters to defend themselves by the same egregious Thread of Blunders, that led them into the Snare.

I shall not enter upon a Detail of the different Faces and Appearances, ces, that Affairs on the Continent have put on fince the Commencement of the War; neither shall I point out the Times when we have B---bb---d the Court of Vienna, or they us; it is well known that the Queen of H----y has been our Tool--- and we in return have been hers: But I shall confine my self to the present Posture, that our Affairs seem to stand in on the Continent; it being such as will hardly admit of any Disguise, therefore, is the sitter to be used to come at the Truth, in the Investigation of the real Cause.

Altho' we are Islanders, and confequently independent on any Power on the Continent, yet our Concerns there are become fo very large, that it puts me to some Difficulty to know in what Part I shall open the Scene: But as the Low Countries have always been looked upon as more immediately under our Tuition, I think it will not be improper to make Entrance there. ----In Flanders, then, the French King at the Head of a numerous Army (which we like kind nurfling Fathers have suffered him to muster up, by our Indolence) has carried all before him; and is become Master of Menin, Tpres, Courtray, Tournay, Ghent, and Bruges; Places that cost us immense Blood and Treasure. Nothing could have preferved Oftend from falling into his Hands, but Heaven it self, by sending down fuch Rains as rendered the Roads thither impassible to his Artillery. The Allied Army after a rash, improper, and desperate Attempt to relieve Tournay, have been obliged continually to retreat from one Post to another, 'till they have quitted Flanders; being reduced to fuch fuch a weak Condition, as not to be able to attack the French Army, when fo advantageous an Opportunity offered (as themselves own) on their being obliged to march their Men thro the Defiles at Gramont, in order to lay Seige to Oudenarde. But fuch is our Misfortune, that the French Army, even by a moderate Computation, amounts to above double the Number of ours; and moreover, is furnished with a grand Train of Artillery. Our Forces are at lengthskulked even beyond Bruffels, near to Louvain, where the French daily raiseContributions, even under their Nofes. As to Affairs on the Rhine, they lately had a very melancholy Aspect; but it seems they have recovered pretty much of late, and the Prince of Conti is faid to be flying before the Grand Duke's Army; if so, and his Flight is real, 'tis well. --- In Bohemia the conjoined

have

(33) joined Army are in almost as bad a Plight, fince their last Action, as that of the Allies in Flanders. They still continuing on the Retreat, and the Pruffin Monarch seems vigoroufly bent to make use of all Advantages.

In Italy the King of Sardinia, feems to be hard put to it, by the French and Spaniards; especially as the Genoese have joined the latter, fearing neither our Threats nor Bombardments. As to the Venetians, 'tis imagined that our Ambassador, far from raising their Spirits, has lulled them into a Lethargy .--- The Empress of Russia, after all her fine Promifes of twelve and fixteen thousand Men, which we have so often been told were upon the March, will enter into no Measures on our Account, but fuch as are entirely pacific; and begs to be excused F perperforming her Engagements other Ways. The Dutch very kindly shake Hands with the French, with their Right Hand, and offer us their Swords in the Left: ---- Such is the View of Affairs on the Continent.

As I have been as concise as posfible in the above Sketch, fo I have taken Care not to exagerate any Article. That Things on the Continent are at present in this woeful Situation, is what any one that reads a News Paper, from the P---r to the Cobler, cannot fail observing, and I take it that whatever is to very obvious as not to admit of any Contradiction needs no Proof. I believe most of my Readers will readily agree with me, That Things both at Home and Abroad are in the same Situation, as I have represented them, if not in a Worse.

Courtiers, Placemen, and Penfioners, indeed may possibly pretend to trump up some Stuss under the De-nomination of Arguments to the contrary: But I shall not heed such Wretches --- unless by observing, that it is as impossible for any one in their Stations, to frame a Judgment on the Welfare of the Nation, as for a blind Man to make Obfervations on Colours. ---- It is true, they have their Senses as well as we; but their Heads are become fo dizzy, by being placed on the Pinacle of Power, and their Eyes fo blinded, by the Gold-Dust that flies about them; as renders it impossible that they should have distinct Ideas of any Thing, befides their Places and Profits. They may guess indeed, at the State of the Ex---ch---r, by the early or late Payment of their Salaries; but therein lies their Ne plus ultra. The State of the E 2

Nation, the State of the Community, or the State of Affairs on the Continent, are Things as far beyond their Knowledge as their Judgement.

If our Army beats the Enemy, they are ever ready to make Bonfires, and drink loyal Healths, at the Crown and People's Expence .---But if they beat us ---- then they'll drink to our better Success in the next Action. ---- But leaving these Wretches, these Minions, and Tools of Power, to wallow in their Mire. I shall now endeavour from the prefent Scene of Assairs, before premised, to trace out the latent Causes thereof; and though I should fail in my Attempt through the Difficulty of the Task, I dare engage, that my Pains will not be unrewarded, by the Veriety of Observations that will accur on the many differdifferent Objects that arise in the Pursuit.

It will be necessary before we attempt the Cause, to make use of a small Retrospection, wherein we shall perceive the Nation in general groaning under the Bonds of Corruption for above twenty Years; in which Time, he that was ashamed to be corrupt, was thought unqualified for any Employment, whether civil or military. All Places were bartered either for Money or Interest; and the chief Minister gloried in his Power, over a Race of venal Creatures: He hung out the Banner of Corruption, under which whoever fought Honours or Preferment, were obliged to lift. The Influence of Venalty foon spread from C---t to Country, and was speedily dispersed all over the Kingdom: Every Borough had its fet Price;

Price; and the Cobler that had a Vote knew the Value of it as well as the Buyer. Nay, Things were come to that pass, that several appeared publickly under the Denomination of Election Jobbers, who knew their Business, and practised it with as much Dexterity, as their Brethren in Change Alley: But not without doing a great deal more Harm to the Nation. --- however, happily there was yet a Remnant of another Party left, that had the Modesty at least to Cloath themfelves in the Garments of Incorruption, and as Honesty generally prevails in the long run, they, at last, got the Better of the M----r and displaced him: Their Leader foon took the Opportunity to slip into his Place, and when the whole Nation cried aloud for dragging the Old Offender to Punishment, he very generoufly skreened him from their their Attempts. This surprised every one at first, but it soon appeared that the New M---r loved Corrupting as well as the Old one, tho' he did not understand the Art fo well for want of Practice; and being of a daring Spirit he would often attempt even greater Practices than his Predecessor, without being so certain of a Majority: But this Overbearance of his proved a Downfal to him at last. --- Indeed, during the short Time of his Reign, he took care to displace some of the most notorious of the late M----r's Gang, ---- but filled up their Places with rather worse from his own. Men were changed but not Meafures; --- excepting that the former M----r being of a timorous Spirit, knew how to make Advantage of Peace. But this being rath and daring, refolved to glut himself with the Spoils of War, that is with the Spoils Spoils of the People in the Time of War. To this End, yet altho' we were already at War with Spain, on Account of our Trade, and had had but indifferent Success; he very affidiously provokes another implacable Enemy to fall upon us, and leads us by degrees into a ruinous, and expensive War on the Continent; even, at a Time, when he knew that our Allies would not partake of the Quarrel. Happily for us, one Campaign passed away inactively on our Side; the Enemy being near treble our Number all the Time, fo that our Men were destined to survive Destruction a Year longer: But before another Campaign came about all E----d had the Pleafure to fee their Tormentor driven from his Post, to their no small Joy.

I must consess my self at a Loss to understand, what Motive could induce our evil Genius? for fo I must call him, to leave us helples, friendless, and almost moneyless into a Land War with a rich and powerful Enemy unless he had premeditated our Destruction beforehand! Experience must needs have shewn, him by our former Successes, that should it turn out even more to our Advantage than our most sanguine Wishes could flatter us, nevertheless we should be sure to come off Losers, as we could not possibly keep any Acquisitions we should make! But it seems our great M---- and Patriot, had other Views and Designs in his Head, England he thought had already been agrandized sufficiently by former Wars, and he was willing another Territory should come in for a Share, in order to curry Favour with his Master. He therefore witelу ly decreed, that what we won H_{--r} should wear.

 \mathbf{F}

I know it will be asked, as he has often done in a very groß manner, * What can H---r get by our beating the French out of Flanders? Or, what will they benefit by our Acquisitions there? To this I answer, The more the French are weakened in Flanders, or elsewhere, the less will they be able to profecute any Designs against that Elec---te. And I should be glad to know, Whether, that in Cafe we were able to make any Conquest in French Flanders, and retain them till a Peace came about; whether, I say, the French King would not be glad to induce his Allies, for fome Equivalent to furrender certain Territories to that El-&-rate in order to regain his own in in Flanders? The Cession that was made to recover Lorginto the Crown of France, is too well known to be repeated. And if his L--df---p, or any other Person, will immediately convence me, that H---r has no Views, no designs, nor Pretentions, to any other Territories, besides those the is in present Possession of; or that she would have the Modesty to refuse the Exceptance of any other acquired or exchanged at our Expence, I will instantly give up the Question; and fairly allow, that our Conquests in the Low Countries would be of no Advantage to H---r: But till then, I must beg to be excused from submitting to his L--df--p's superior Judgment on this Point.

But to return, no fooner had this great Man refigned, or rather no F 2 fooner fooner was he obliged to do it than we found Or-f-rd's Maxim verified, That every Man has his Price; and this so manifestly, that even those whose immense Estates and Honours should have put them out of the Reach of all Court Allurements, were the first to run into the inchanted Circle. The late M---r's Creatures were soon sent adrift, and a Race of nominal Patriots succeeded. Men that had feen and fuffered, under the Management of both the former M---rs, and were thought by the whole Nation, the propercst to give a better Turn to Affairs. Soon as they entered on Business, fome Overtures were made to prevent the Progress of Corruption; but they were very little if at all hearkened to ---- they found us entered into a War with France and Spain, with not a Friend to affift us, unless we paid them for it: As for

for the Dutch they absolutely declared off any Thing, farther than acting as Auxiliaries—— the Queen of Hungary was re-established in the Possession of all her Territories, and soon after the Death of the Emperor happened —— which Accident was regarded by every one, as the sure fore-runner of a Peace.

Indeed it would have been happy for us, had our new M----y taken that favourable Opportunity to make fome Overtures, or to gain fome Powers to mediate Peace for us; as they well knew the whole Burthen and Expence of the War, must otherwise fall to our Share. --- But unluckily, there was no Man thought so proper to enter our Patriots into Ministerial Arts, as one that had been the Tool of both the former; and he was put at the Head of them, having served a double Prenticeship to Corruption, undet O---rf---d; and half a one to proffessed H---n-0--v--n Principles, under his Successor. --- He well knew that however acceptable a Peace might be to the People of England, he could not make his Court with it at another Place: ---- But however, he managed Matters very dextroufly --- made great Promises of reforming Abuses, and destroying Corruption, &c. until such Time as he found the new entered Patriots had tasted the Sweets of Preferment; and then, he changed both his Tone and his Measures. It was too late for them to look back, they had begun to relish the Delights of Power --- they had been at considerable Expences to be re-chosen for their Corporations, and in fine, they came as ready into C---t Measures, as even the Old Minister himself could wish.

Now

Now far from endeavouring to acquire Peace on honourable Terms, they breathed nothing but War; and to that Purpose, engaged the El---r of Ba----ria to their Interests, in order to weaken France. Had they brought the King of Prussia over; then indeed they had done somewhat worthy of themfelves - but that alas! was never thought of - It was enough for their Honours to gain a half ruined young Prince, who was ready to feek shelter from any that would protect him — This done, they fend one of their most famous Chiefs to tickle the Ears of the Dutch, to induce them to come into their Measures. Great was the Success they flattered themselves with, from the known Abilities of their Em — d_r; but the Dutch were too crasty to be tickled into the

the Net, and took in the P—r, the same way as he thought to have caught them: So the whole Negotiation ended in long Harrangues, sine Speeches, and complimenting Letters. Nevertheless, our new M—rs gave out very boldly that they had obtained their Ends; and the H—drs were following our Steps with all Speed: But this is not the first L—nor the first Piece of Assurance, that they have palmed upon us since the Commencement of their Ad-m-st-n.

Thus Kings have been drawn on by Degrees, 'till they are at length arrived to the Pass that I laid down before, insomuch that we are not a Jot nearer gaining Peace upon honourable Terms, than we were at the Beginning of the War; neither are we any nearer obtaining Satissaction for the immence Expences we have been at. And thus have I traced the Progress of Corruption, and H-n-v-r-i-n Influence, from Or-f-d's Administration to this Time: having shewn that they have been the Springs of all our Transactions from that Time to this; and if so, consequently are also the Causes of the present melancholy Scenes both at home and abroad; as these are entirely the Result of our former Transactions and Measures.

The Chain of Facts that I have made use of in this Discovery, are too undeniable to be contested: But if any Person can account for the present State of Astairs, without the Assistance of either of these two Machines, C-r-pt-n and H-n-r-Influence; I shall readily submit and acknowledge myself in an Error. Or if any of the new minister-rial Party, should be so far from being convinced that Assairs are in the Situation I have represented; as to deny it, I am ready, upon Condition of their obtaining me a thorough Indemnification, for some particular Expressions I shall be obliged to use, to make it as plain as the Nose on a Man's Face.

But seeing the many Tricks, Screens, and Evasions, that they have lately been obliged to use; may not we suspect that Things are rather in a worse Condition than what I have here represented? If we gain the least trivial Advantage, it is magnified even to such a Rate as at last to lose all Credit. If we meet with a Missortune, or a Defeat, the Loss is so excessively diminished, that upon second Report we take it to have been only a Skirmish. Soon after the late Battle, when when the Praises of the Regularity of the Retreat, made more Noise in our Ears, than the Guns of the Tower would have done for a Victory; was it not confidently afferted that we had faved our Artillery? 'till foon after an Order coming to the Ordonance-Office for more, put a Stop to the Falshood, to the Confusion of the Assertors. Nay even our Gazettes, tho' publish'd by A-- -y, are taught to L - - in the politest Manner. That if Brussels is of late so full of Iricisms and Hodge Podge in relating the Tranfactions of the Austrian and Allied Armies, as scarce to admit of a Translation, and ours very often gives us a Piece of News, rather to be withed true than that it is really fo; and which, perhaps, is contradicted in the next Paragraph. I need go no farther for an Instance than in the Gazette of Saturday Ju-G 2

ly, 13th, 1745. where in the Letter from the Hague, of July 18th, are these Words, viz. "There is " yet no Account of the French ha-" ving made themselves Masters of " the Citadel of Ghent, or the " Town of Bruges. General Molk, " with the Squadrons he saved out " of Ghent, is arrived at sas de " Grand." What manifest Contradictions, after all the Public Papers had confirmed the taking of Ghent and Bruges, by the French; out steps this little Gazette, and has the Assurance to contradict them, and himself too; For, if Ghent was not taken, why did General Molk quit it? Or how, otherways, can he be faid to have faved his Squadrons from thence? Or if the Citadel held out, how came the French Army to march to Oudenard, before they had reduced it? whither it was confirmed by all the foreign Papers they were were gone. — But this shews, to what little Shists the M — y are driven, to keep up the Spirits of the People.

It would have been no difficult Matter to have prognofficated our Success this Campaign, when it was perceived that we were pursuing the same Steps as we took the Last: But however, the Blame is all laid upon the Dutch, tho' we are the Sufferers. — And indeed we have really Occasion to blame them, for delaying to fend the Forces that are stipulated for them to furnish as Auxiliaries; ---- but that they are to be confured for not entering the War as Principles, is what I cannot acquicsce in; therefore must beg leave, before I conclude, to offer a few Words in there Behalf, which, I hope will be the readier granted me, as I do not find that any one as yet has appeared in their Favour.

The

The Hollanders, are a People whom I never took to be our Friends, farther than Interest compelled them. It is true they owe their very Being, as a State to our Queen Elizabeth; but it seems they either think that Time has obliterated the Obligation, or that the have sufficiently repaid it otherways. They are now their own Masters, and so far from owing us any Subjection, they are endeavouring as much as is in their Power, to bring us under the Hatches, by depriving us of as many Branches of Trade as they conveniently can: How much, or how justly soever we may upbraid them with this, we cannot certainly cenfure for not becoming Principals in a War of our own stairing up. order to judge of another, it is necessary that we put ourselves in their Circumstances. Let us therefore imagine, that we were become Masters sters of a most affluent Trade, which we had been many Years in bringing to the Perfection it is in; and let us suppose also, that a neighbouring Nation was our Rival in feveral Branches of Commerce, and looked on our Progress with an evil Eye. But, however, that we were in Alliance with that Nation, having agreed mutually to defend each other whenever attacked. Now supposing this Nation, without ever confulting with us, rushes precipitately into a War with a rich Potent, and inveterate Enemy; and that we cannot help observing, that it will be impossible for that Nation to reap any Advantages therefrom; neither are we thoroughly apprized of the Inducements leading to this War; nor of the Motives, for which it is waged; neither can we perceive any Interest pursued thereby, unless such as is quite Foreign to that Nation, Nation, ferving only to aggrandize a distant People, with whom we have no Concerns either in Trade or otherways: Supposing this to be the Case, I say, betwixt our Neighbours and us; would we be willing to plung ourselves into a long and inextricable; ruinous War, on Account of our Neighbours Rashness or Folly? ---- Certainly, No, but is it not the Circumstances of the Case I just now recited, parallel to that between the Dutch and us? Have we not entered on a grevious, ruinous Land War; to the impoverishing ourselves and Posterity, without any Views of Retribution? Did we confult them before we marched our Forces? ---- Are they obliged, if they perceive it to be a Destructive War, to enter into it to ruin themselves to humour us in our Quixotisms?

Do they not reap more Advantage

tages from a peaceful Commerce, than any they could hope for by entering into War? Or, Would they not readily join us in any Enterprize on the Continent, had we no other Interests to serve there but our own? Was not our leaving them in the Lurch, at the End of the last War, sussicient to deter them from engaging hand-over-head with us again? Tho' these Rea-fons, if rightly considered, may be fufficient to excuse them from cntering as Parties with us in the present War; nevertheless, I cannot help thinking, that thhy may have fome other which are unrevealed as yet, of a much stronger Nature. Nay, it even begins to be talked of, as if they were piqued at some Engagements that they had discovered between the Queen of Hungay and us, concerning Oflend; which if executed would be very much 1-1 much to their Disadvantage. must confess that it seems to me to be a Sort of Solecism in Politicks, to try all Means to gain the Affistance of an Ally, and at the same Time be undertaking fuch Measures as must certainly disoblige them, if not create an ulter Enmity. --- The Dutch are a free People, Trade is their Support, and Nobody can blame them for being jealous of that Support; for when once they lofe their Trade, all is lost to them. This they know full well, and it is on this Account, they are so slow and timerous, of entering into the Warfare; not that they are destitute of Means sufficient in their Hands to defend or revenge themfelves: But it is a fort of Maxim among them, that whilst a trading People are engaged in War, their Commerce is sure to suffer for it; this makes them to Trade very wary, well well knowing that the Loss of a few Ships, would be a greater Damage to them, than that of all the Towns in Flanders.

I had almost forgot to mention another very great Inconvenience, into which the Hollanders would be led by their entering into a War which is, that of chusing a Stadtholder; This is what they can hardly bear the Thoughts of, fince his Power in Time of War is so unlimitted, as to be almost arbitrary. But as I believe the strongest Arguments will not induce them to take the Field, unless the French directly attack them; therefore I think the Election of Stadtholder far enough off; not that I have any Suspicion of a private Understanding between the States and France; for the D---ch are too fubtle, and too well acquainted with that Court, to trust her in any Intreagues. But Time

Time will disolve all Things; therefore I shall take my Leave of them for the present, not doubting but they have as many Reasons for their pacific Operations, and perhaps as strong, as we can for our military, whenever they shall think proper to divulge them.

F I N I S.

Fust Published:

HANOVERIAN POLITICKS; in a Letter from a Gentlenan at Hanover to his Friend in England.

Ö

